How to Pay for Memorials Sponsored Links You have to choose which method of payment to use to pay for your funeral memorials or cremation. There are several different methods of payment in New Zealand, including; Life Cover, Terminal Registrations, Direct Aged Cash, and Direct Aged Bequests. There are different methods for each, so it is important to research the different options and what is required for each. Sponsored Links Terminal Registrations Terminal Registrations is a method of payment often used for people wanting to be cremated, however, it can also be used for those who want to be buried as well. It is an often used method of payment as it is quick and easy. It requires the following steps to be completed: Fulfilling the prerequisites for the method of payment. This means having at least $5000 worth of your life cover. You need to declare your death before 31 July 2014. To get the paperwork done, visit the website www.terminalregistrations.co.nz or call them on +6421 644 111. Direct Aged Cash This is the most expensive method of payment for burials. This is the cheapest way to pay for your funeral memorials, however it still requires two steps: Fill out the form that is sent to you. The form should be sent to your home address, and will be sent within 12 months. The form is for you to create a local bank account, and then get the money in that bank account as soon as possible. Direct Aged Bequests This is the cheapest way to pay for funeral memorials, however, it has one step to complete in order to get the money: The way this works is that the legacy left by the deceased will be split among you, so that you can then decide how you want to spend the money. If the deceased is less than 18 years old, you will need the written consent of the child's parent or guardian. This can be provided on the form that you are sent after you have completed the form above.
